INTRODUCTION

Ancient Tark, the capital of Cimmeria. Protected by strong walls and just rulers, the great city is led by Konin, a worthy descendant of the great kings of old.

Seeking to solidify his power, Konin led his bravest warriors to the deep caverns under the far-off mountains. There, according to prophecy, an ancient relic--the sword of Krom--has lain for centuries awaiting its new owner.

In the hands of the king, Krom's sword will forever ensure the safety of Cimmeria.

But Konin chose the wrong time for his crusade. Konin's sister Mara had long planned to gain control of the kingdom. Alone in the palace after Konin's departure, she finally set her plans in motion.

Bloody sacrifices to the evil gods that dwell in the deepest recesses of the underworld have made Mara a powerful sorceress. Using her dark magic, she convinced most of the soldiers of the land that Konin and his crusaders were forever lost in the ancient caves. What little resistance remained among Konin's loyal men was easily crushed.

It was not long before the news of Mara's coup in Cimmeria reached the Vikings' capital city. Fearing an imminent attack from Cimmeria, The Council of Elders decided to take all necessary precautions to protect their people. Drawing the army closer to the city, the Elders sent trusted council member Earl Barmalay to retrieve Thor's Hammer, another powerful ancient relic of great renown.

Barmalay set off immediately to Baltor, the town where the god Thor was rumored to have entrusted his hammer to the townsfolk to protect them from evil.

The journey to Baltor was long, but not difficult. Plans were made to send Barmalay and a small detachment to the town by airship. The entire trip should have taken only a couple of days. But the Elders underestimated the reach of Mara's dark powers. No one suspected that she could strike so deeply into the heart of the Viking empire. The decision to gather an army so close to the town was a horrible error. In the maelstrom of Mara's magical fire, the town, its people, and The Council of Elders were reduced to ashes.

The effects of Mara's attack were felt across the land. Many leagues away, Barmalay was blasted from his course before he could reach Baltor. Alive but cut off from all support, lost in the forests of Cimmeria, Barmalay and his small band of followers must find some way to counter Mara's evil magic and bring peace to all the land.
